Rob Georg - Ghost

The sounds of cinematic sound design combined with steel slide guitar and acoustics in a purely country setting is really engaging. This is the impression I get from the new release of "Ghose" by Rob Georg. I'm taken back to the Sub:marine Records (now defunct) release of the similarly named "Henry's Ghost" which was a beautiful combination of country and electronics.

The tune is a soundscape of beautiful instrumentation with top-notch singing. Although the song itself is rather dark and communicates a helplessness in grief recovery, it's about an individual being haunted and unable to move on. I imagine there is something rather sympathetic about hearing the pangs of separation penned by Mr. Georg. Hear "Ghost" on Spotify here.
